Keeping a Close Eye on the Public's Interest

By all accounts our new volume Forbidden History is doing well. The publisher, Inner Traditions/Bear informs us that the book is off to a very strong start and is exceeding expectations. That, of course, is not to say that it is exceeding our expectations. At Atlantis Rising we have believed, since our inception, that there is a tremendous unrequited public desire for more of this kind of material (i.e., ancient mysteries, unexplained anomalies, future science, etc.) and as I have discussed Forbidden History on various radio talk shows the point has been underscored.

Don't let the so-called mainstream media convince you that the subjects covered here should be placed entirely under the heading of fringe science. It so happens that what the scientific establishment consigns to the fringe, the vast majority of the public puts much closer to the center of its concerns. A recent Gallup poll, in fact, reports that "about three in four Americans profess at least one paranormal belief." The most popular is extrasensory perception (ESP). In this area, at least, the pronouncements of the scientific elite regarding what we may or may not believe can be countermanded by the evidence of our own senses. The old sales pitch, "Who are you going to believe? Me or your lying eyes?" may be failing again. Certainly many of us have personally witnessed many things which orthodox science cannot begin to explain.

The Gallup poll is not the only recent indicator of weakness in the scientific edifice. According to the Louis Finkelstein Institute for Social and Religious Research, more than 60% of doctors reject the Darwinian belief that "humans evolved naturally with no supernatural involvement." According to Drs. Michael A. Glueck and Robert J. Cihak writing for Jewish World Review onLine, doctors know too much about the actual working of the body to be impressed by the simplicities offered in the Darwinian perspective. One example cited is the human eye—an amazing complex which shows all the hallmarks of a designed system and one which the standard evolutionary model cannot begin to explain.

The polling data which should probably be the most troubling to official science, however, comes from Minnesota's Health Partners Research Foundation. According to a report published in June in the British journal Nature, one in three U.S. scientists, in an anonymous survey, admitted to breaking—in the last three years—rules designed to insure the honesty of their work. The misbehaviors, says the Minneapolis Star Tribune, range from claiming credit for someone else's work to changing study results due to pressure from a sponsor. "Our findings suggest," say the authors, "that U.S. scientists engage in a range of behaviors extending far beyond falsification, fabrication and plagiarism that can damage the integrity of science."

Once again, Atlantis Rising and our new book Forbidden History offer an alternative to the usual fare. In this issue you will find plenty to chew on that you will not see in the mainstream press or the tabloids. Not only will John Kettler show you a technology which offers amazing X-ray vision capabilities and a great deal more, Cynthia Logan talks to Lynne McTaggart author of The Field: The Quest for the Secret Force in the Universe, David Childress explores the maps of the Ancient Sea Kings, and Walter Cruttenden writes on the implications of a binary twin star to our sun and, as usual, there's much more.
